Peter Imoudu, Professor of Agricultural Economics, is dead

The Federal University of Technology, Akure has lost one of its eminent and highly esteemed Professors, Peter Briama Imoudu, a Professor of Agricultural Economics. He passed on on May 6, 2014 during a brief illness.

In a condolence letter to the family, the Vice-Chancellor, Professor Adebisi Daramola said "the demise of this eminent scholar is a great loss to the University in particular and the nation in general. However, we are comforted by the fact that his footprints on the sands of time will remain indelible for his contributions to the development of this great University."

Late Professor Imoudu, 64, joined the services of the University as Lecturer I on October 1, 1984 and served meritoriously in several capacities including Head of Department. He was also between 2000 – 2003, Director, FUTA BDC.

The Management, staff and students of the University share in the grief of the family and pray that God grants the family the fortitude to bear the irreparable loss.
